CAITLIN HEISING

EXPANDING CONTRACEPTIVE ACCESS AND CHOICE FOR TEEN MOTHERS IN NICARAGUA

Caitlin is a leader in next generation (next gen) philanthropy. Passionate about human rights, she currently works for Article 3 Advisors, a nonprofit human rights and strategic philanthropy consultancy. Caitlin is also a 2016 Research Fellow at Institute for the Future, where she collaborates on research projects exploring the future of philanthropy and next gen giving. Caitlin is the Co-Founder/Co-Chair of the Human Rights Watch Young Professionals Network, and is a member of several young philanthropy groups, including Spark, Nexus, and the Gates Foundation's Giving Pledge Next Generation Network.

Caitlin graduated from Brown University in 2012 with a BA in international relations and a focus in politics, culture, and identity. Upon graduating, she worked at Brunswick Group, an international corporate communications partnership that helps businesses and other organizations address critical communications challenges. In 2014 she joined the board of the Heising-Simons Foundation, where she has been developing a grant-making program focused on human rights. Caitlin also serves on the board of the Nick Simons Foundation, which works to improve health and medical care in Nepal, especially for rural and remote populations. Caitlin is on the San Francisco Executive Committee of Human Rights Watch and the Bay Area Board of Peer Health Exchange. She is a member of The Philanthropy Workshop, a leader in ongoing strategic philanthropy education and networking, and is a 200-hour certified yoga teacher.
